NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 20, 1892,

MRS. WALDEN'S JURY.

Completed at Noon and Her Trial for Murder Begun.

The Woman Wears Widow's Weeds for the Man She Killed.

A Witness Testifies that She Wanted to Kiss the Dying Man.

A stender, frail little woman, clad in deep-est mourning, walked beside Deputy Sheriff John Brown from the Tombs Prison to the marble Court-House this morning. The big Deputy Sheriff towered above her like a giant, and though his pace was very slow her tiny feet pattered rapidly on the sidewalk in Hers was a pallid face. The great brown eyes wore a half-sad, half-frightened look. She got hardly more than a passing glance from the people met in Centre street, yet she was walking to the stern tribunal which was to try her for her life.

The girlish little creature was Annie Walden, who shot and killed her husband, Jimmie en, the boy turfman and nineteen-year old son of old Jeter Walden, and nephew of Vyndham Walden, famous trainers of race

She is in reality hardly more than a girl, for she is not yet twenty-one years old. She ms to have had no girlhood, for she had attained a questionable sort of fame long before both were on a spree last September.

The work of completing the jury was the first order of business to-day. The men acde-faced creature in black were :

12. Heavy Yogal, oldthier, 202 Third arenue; residence 56 East Righty-third street.

12. Heary Yegal, clothier, 802 Third arenue; residence 56 East Righry-third street.

Each one of these men had told Prosecutor Weilman under cath that he would convict a woman as readily as a man on the same evidence of guilt.

The work of securing the jury was completed at 12.10 o'clock. The pirlsoner was attacked by distinces while it was being concluded, and her friends had to fan her vigorously and apply smelling saits to keep her from ininting away. Twice it was found necessary to take her out into the cooler air of the corridors, and at state times the trial proceedings were susponded.

This is fine story of the crime for which annie Walden is being tried: On the evening of Oct. 30 she rung the bell at the house of Samuel Harris, a well-known turmaan, at 300 West. Thirty-eight street. Jimmie Walden was dining there, with his old chum, Wa'ter Green, a son-in-law of Harriss, and had gone there that day after a quarrel with his wife at their fiat, 220 West Fortleth street.

She called for Jimmie Walden, and he went out with her. They crossed seventh arenue and walked two blocks. At the corner of Fortleth street the couple passed, tuder the caves of the Metropolitan Opera-House.

Policeman Griffin H. Merritt, patrolling there, as we them there. Saddenly the woman drew a gittering revolver from the pocket of her jacket, there were two reports, and "She has shot me!" gasped the youth, and blood gushed from a would in the neck and from another in the lung.

"Yes, that is my husband and I have shot him," said Annio Walden, and later she told Officer Thompson:

"I shot that man because I would not let any other woman have him," adding: "Flease notify his father, Joter Walden, who lives at Eatontown, New Jersey, but is now in Washington."

That was at 8 o'clock in the evening of October 30. At 8.55 Jimmie Walden died in New York Hospital. In his questions to the jurymen Mr. Howe intlinated that he should claim that Annie Walden was made temperarily insane by her

JUDGE INGRAHAM.

"I was on post, Oct. 30, in Thirty-ninth and Fortieth streets, and was travelling up Seventh avenue at about 7.40 in the evening, when I saw a man and woman standing on the southeast corner of Fortieth street and Seventh avenue, talking.

"They were three or four feet apart and twenty-five or thirty feet from me. I saw itse woman suddenly raise her hand, a pistol flashed, there was a report and almost immediately there was another report.

"After the first shot the man grasped the wrists of the woman just as the second shot came."

other deed of violence by the man to the woman.

"I ran towards them, reaching them just as the man fell. I saw his neckile was aftre, and I saked: 'What is the matter with you people!"

"He said: 'This woman has shot me.' She said: 'Yes, that is my husband, and I shot him."

"What was her appearance and condition at the time?" asked Mr. Wellman.

"She was excited somrwhat. Her huir was dishovelled and her hat was off. She straightened up, threw her head back and wagned it defiantly when she said, 'That's my husband. I did it."

definally when she said, 'That's my husband. I did it.'"
Mr. Howe, cross-examining, began with:
"Her hat was on the ground, and you noticed that she was covered with bruises, didn't you?"
"No, sir: I saw no bruises."
"No bruises I No bruises, did you say?"
The policeman repeated that he had not seen any bruises, and Mr. Howe relinquished him.
Henry G. Mailon, who was a policeman at the time of the shooting, and who relieved Officer Merritt of his prisoner, testified:

both were on a spree last September.

Annie was known to men who frequent the race tracks as "Kittle Marshall," who bet her money on the norses just like a man, only more recklessiy and with phenomenal luck.

She had been the heroine of at least one liaison before she met Jeter Walden's boy, and once called herself "Mrs. Katte Delmar," in honor or otherwise of a Brooklyn man with whom she had lived.

Three other young women in black greeted "Head charge of Annie at the time of the shooting he asked her: "What did you want to shoot that man for?" She answered: "Bécause he is my husband and I will not give any other woman for?" She answered: "Bécause he is my husband and I will not give any other woman for?" She answered: "Bécause he is my husband and I will not give any other woman for?" She answered: "Bécause he is my husband and I will not give any other woman the satisfaction of having him." "Later, at the station, she told the sergeant: 'I shot him because he beat me," "added the witness.

the sergeant: 'I shot him because he ucat me.'" added the witness.

"The Sergeant asked her where she got the revolver. She said she bought it, but she refused to tell where she bought it. She threw the pistol into the crowd after the shooting and it was brought to the station by Citizen Rdwin soot next day."

The witness said that the woman seemed perfectly cool and unconcerned just after the tragedy.

During the recital of these witnesses Annie Walden reclined in the arms of her friends, her eyes closed and her face very pale.

A recess was taken shortly after 1 o'clock.
